PHANTOM MAIL

Dear Editor:

Nice Going! You folks at Charlton have been putting out one great Phantom issue after another and #70 was no exception! "The mystery of the Mali Ibex" by Bill Pearson was as intriguing as "Casablanca"; jam-packed full with thrills and suspense! The Phantom and Bogey, WOW! What a team-up! Doctors Wildman, Pearson, and Newton really brought the characters to life! After finishing this masterpiece, I have decided that Don Newton is my favorite artist!

This Phantom of the 30's was a special treat and terrific. I hope every so often we'll be seeing more of the past Phantoms. The plots and settings for their stories make fascinating reading.

Yep, this was a great issue all right and I'm sure your friendly competitors are eating their hearts out!

Yours forever ... or at least until DOOMSDAY PLUS 1 becomes reality.

Tom Scott,
DeKalb, Ill 60115

We agree with you, Tom. Bill Pearson did a really great job on this Phantom, putting him in another and possibly more exciting time period. And, as you pointed out, you'll be seeing more issues in which the Ghost - Who - Walked long, long ago battles enemies of other eras.

Don Newton's Phantom is the most popular interpretation in many years. He's a very gifted artist and we hope he continues doing Charlton comics for a long time to come.

Dear Phantom people:

Please, whatever you do, keep Don Newton drawing the Phantom. His work is exceptional. I've only been with the Phantom for about ten issues but I tell you now, if you keep Newton on the job, you have a lifetime reader in me. He is such a vast improvement over your previous artists that it makes his work all the more enjoyable.

For the first time since I don't know when, we are given a look at the true PHANTOM. The "Ghost - Who - Walks" is finally depicted as the grim statue of justice that lives in shrouded mystery, stepping from the shadows to swiftly strike at the evils which threaten all of us. He is an awe - inspiring sight.

However, it would be unfair at this time not to give credit to Joe Gill who turned in a superior effort in "Triumph of Evil". Why don't you keep Gill and Newton together? Under their control, the PHANTOM will remain the dark avenger of the jungle! Oh, just one more thing — Newton's covers — I love them!

Sincerely yours,
Clay McBride

We seem to have aroused a lot of enthusiasm among some of you fans with the last few issues of THE PHANTOM. The first letter was full of raves for #70 and Clay's letter just as enthusiastically praised the issue that preceded it. That's the way we like it. Boundless enthusiasm for everything Charlton does!

As a matter of fact, the last few issues of THE PHANTOM have been exceptionally well done. Our editor, George Wildman, is very pleased as well and he's going to make sure that future issues are equally well done.

Dear Charlton:

THE PHANTOM #70 was the best issue yet of the "new" Phantom. The art was beautiful and it's nice to see Don back full-time. All the movie scenes were great and I really loved Don's Bogie and Bacall.

The story was incredible. Bill wrote an excellent (debut?) tale which tied in a few Bogart films and a couple of generations of Phantoms. It's really nice to read a comic that is open to change and experimentation.

Thanks again and please keep the Phantom out of the jungle!

Hilary Barta
Evanston, Ill.

We'd like to have included at least one letter criticizing something about recent issues of THE PHANTOM but we didn't receive any. Now, don't rush to your desks and pound out critical letters to make the page, just tell us how you sincerely feel about our books.

Incidentally, the next issue of Charlton Bullseye #5 will feature an interview with your favorite Phantom artist, Don Newton. Plenty of other news and features about your favorite comics company, too. $1.25 per copy; postpaid, from Charlton Bullseye, C.P.I. Gang Publications. P.O. Box 877, East Derby Station, Derby, CT 06418.

INVADERS in BENGALI!

Outside, the blazing, hot sun was scorching the Phantom's realm. The jungle was the Phantom's home. The people and the animals that dwelled in the deep, dark jungle were under the protection of the Ghost Who Walks.

Everything that happened in Bengali was the Phantom's business. The jungle was like a gigantic house without walls. If something needed to be fixed, corrected or eliminated, the Ghost Who Walks intervened. No one questioned the Phantom's judgment. No one disobeyed his orders. The word of the Phantom was the unwritten law of Bengali.

There was an intricate balance between the people, the animals and the plants of the jungle. To keep the balance from being upset, the Phantom had to have eyes and ears everywhere.

From his place on Skull Throne, the Phantom could see rays of brilliant sunlight streaming in through the mouth of Skull Cave. The sun was at its zenith. This was a time of peace in Bengali. Only fools, thieves and scavengers moved through the still jungle when the sun was high and hot. It was quiet outside. It was very quiet, and it was supposed to be quiet.

Suddenly, the jungle birds began to shriek and squeal in alarm. Beasts of prey roared to tell members of their species that something was amiss! Something dangerous was on the prowl, but what could it be?

Then, the Phantom heard a shocking sound echo through his private domain. Like thunder, the sound rumbled ominously. There was no mistaking what it was! Immediately, the Phantom knew that invaders had entered his realm. The dreaded sound that he heard was a gunshot! The hated invaders were hunters!

Instantly, the Phantom sprang out of his chair. Like lightning, he bolted out of Skull Cave and like a wisp of dissipating smoke he vanished as he darted into the underbrush.

The first shot was followed by a second, and then a third. Soon, a volley of shots echoed through the peaceful jungle.

"Good shooting, Mr. Kane," complimented the jungle guide as he patted his perspiring, rich client on his sweaty back. "That antelope's head will look great in your den!"

Kane lowered his high powered rifle and smiled as he looked at the lifeless beast lying in the clearing just ahead. "You were right, Carter," said Kane to his lone guide. "There is plenty of game here in Bengali. It's almost as if no one ever hunts here!"

"They don't!" replied Carter as the two men walked toward the dead antelope. "Most guides are afraid to hunt in Bengali. Supposedly, a living ghost called the Phantom protects Bengali. This jungle is supposed to be off limits to hunters and guides, but I'm not the superstitious type! The natives believe in the Phantom myth, but I don't!"

"I only believe in what I can see!" answered Kane. "Most of the time, whatever I see, I can afford to buy!" he bragged as he leaned over the trophy he'd just bagged.

"Those who hunt in Bengali, are hunted by the Phantom!" echoed a bone - chilling voice from out of the dense underbrush.

Quickly, fearfully, worriedly, Kane and Carter looked up. Automatically, their eyes scanned the jungle around them. Cautiously, they peered into the thick foliage. Even though the sun was high and hot, its light could not pierce the blackness of the overgrown jungle.

"Did I really hear that?" stammered Kane nervously.

"If you want to know if I heard it too, I did!" answered Carter as he continued to look around.

"Go!" called the Phantom from his hiding place. "Leave Bengali. Take only what you came with. Go while you can!"

"I won't be chased out of the jungle by something I can't see!" growled Carter angrily. "This is a trick! There is no Phantom!"

Two flashes of fire and sparks glowed in the jungle for an instant as the Phantom fired his two .45 automatics. The Phantom's aim was deadly and accurate! What he aimed at, he hit!

Carter's rifle cracked and splintered as bullets tore the weapon out of the hunter's hands. The gun was smashed, broken, useless!

"Leave now with the one, remaining rifle that you have or I'll disarm you completely!" warned the Phantom in a spine tingling tone. "Without weapons, the hunters will become the hunted! Go! This is my final warning!"

"Let's get out of here while we're still alive," Kane advised his guide. "The Phantom is no myth! I don't know who or what he is, but he's out there somewhere and he's dangerous!"

The two invaders fled Bengali fearing for their lives.

The antelope they had killed would provide meat for the weak and the hungry. Nothing was wasted in Bengali. The Ghost Who Walks kept his realm in perfect balance and order.
